ABOUT THE SCHULICH SCHOOL OF LAW

The Schulich School of Law plays an extraordinary role in Canadian legal education. What began as a “daring experiment” in two rented rooms in 1883 is now Canada’s most national law school. We draw talented students from every region of the country and from around the world into our J.D., combined J.D./Masters, LL.M. and Ph.D. programs.

We are committed teachers who care deeply about giving our students an outstanding legal education. We are research leaders with rich local, national and international networks and profiles, and we embrace the interdisciplinary opportunities found in our university setting. We are advocates who believe we can make a difference in the service of human and public policy problems.

We graduate leaders. Our alumni hold every form of governmental office, teach in law schools, provide innovative private and public sector legal services, lead businesses, advance policy in the executive branch of government, render decisions on courts across the country, and offer service to non-governmental bodies and non-profit and community organizations around the world.

We live the “Weldon Tradition” of unselfish public service, and it brings us together – past and present students, faculty, staff, and friends. We value the contributions of the founding communities in our province, the Mi’kmaq Nation, Acadians, African Nova Scotians, and British, and we open our doors to the world.
